

Processing Wild Rice

Two Menominee
women pound
the rice to loosen the hulls.

A bark and cattail
mat covered wigwam.

By Jessica Diemer-Eaton, 2010. Distributed by Woodland Indian Educational Programs. Not for sale or redistribution. www.WoodlandIndianEDU.com

An Ojibwa girl winnows
the rice by pouring
it as the wind blows
so that the breeze
carries the hulls away.